EXAMINER'S AMENDMENT

1. An examiner's amendment to the record appears below. Should the changes and/or additions be unacceptable to applicant, an amendment may be filed as provided by 37 CFR 1.312. To ensure consideration of such an amendment, it MUST be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee.

Authorization for this examiner's amendment was given in a telephone interview with Lawrence Laubscher on 08/14/2007.

The application has been amended as follows:

Claims 1, 2, 14, and 15, "said expected delay" has been changed to - - said predicted delay - -.

Claim 3, line 1, "claim 1" has been changed to - - claim 2 - -.

Claim 3, line 1, "said defined parameters" has been changed to - - said predefined values - -.

Claims 11 and 24, "said expected value" has been changed to - - said predicted delay- -.

Claim 16, line 1, "claim 14" has been changed to - - claim 15 - -.

Claim 16, line 1, "said defined parameters" has been changed to - - said predefined values - -.

The examiner's amendment was made to correct lack of antecedent basis for the above claims.

Reasons for Allowance

2. Claims 1-26 are allowed.
3. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

Claim 1 is allowable over the prior art of record since the cited reference taken individually or in combination fails to particularly disclose aligning clock domains over an asynchronous network between a source controlled by a first clock and a destination controlled by a second clock by a) estimating a predicted delay for transmitting packets between a source and destination over the network, b) sending time-stamped synchronization packets to the destination, each time-stamped synchronization packet carrying timing information based on a master clock at the source, c) receiving a set of synchronization packets at the destination to create a set of data points, d) weighting the set of data points so that synchronization packets exhibiting a delay further from the predicted delay are accorded less weight than synchronization packets exhibiting a delay closer to the predicted delay; e) updating the predicted delay to create a current delay estimate based on the set of data points taking into account the different weighting of the data points, f) continually repeating steps d and e on new sets of data points created from newly received synchronization packets using the current delay estimate for the predicted delay; and g) continually aligning a clock domain at the destination with a clock domain at the source based on the current delay estimate for packets traversing the network between the source and destination.

Claim 14 is allowable over the prior art of record since the cited reference taken individually or in combination fails to particularly disclose aligning clock domains over an asynchronous network between a source controlled by a first clock and a destination controlled by a second clock, by a) a predictor for predicting the delay expected for packets traversing the network between a source and destination, b) a sender for sending time-stamped synchronization packets to the destination, each time-stamped synchronization packet carrying timing information based on a master clock at the source, c) a receiver for receiving a set of synchronization packets at the destination to create a set of data points, d) a non-linear filter for weighting the set of data points so that synchronization packets exhibiting a delay further from the predicted delay are accorded less weight than synchronization packets exhibiting a delay closer to the predicted delay, e) the predictor updating the predicted delay to create a current delay estimate based on the set of data points taking into account the different weighting of the data points; whereby the clock domain at the destination can be continually aligned with a clock domain at the source based on the current delay estimate for packets traversing the network between the source and destination.
